OG&E to propose new rate plan

Key proposals include major reliability improvements, low-income assistance and lower costs for schools, small businesses and Tinker Air Force Base

OKLAHOMA CITY — OG&E Electric Services announced today that the company will ask the Oklahoma Corporation Commission to approve an increase in electric rates to pay for major reliability investments in the OG&E electric system.

The company said it will seek to include system reliability investments it has made and continues to make in the electric generation, transmission and distribution systems as well as the cost of the newly acquired, highly efficient McClain Power Plant in the utility's electric rates.

We will propose a progressive plan to ensure the reliability of our electric system and accommodate the growing economy and population in the OG&E service area, said OG&E spokesman Brian Alford. Our goals in designing the plan include limiting the increase in the average residential customer's monthly electric bill to less than $5 per month, encouraging small business growth and keeping electric rates for our large industrial customers competitively below the national average.

OG&E will propose a new rate design with a number of innovative components, including low income assistance and lower costs for schools, Tinker Air Force Base and small businesses. The company also expects to propose expanding to all residential and most small-business customers a billing option that guarantees their electric bill will be the same every month.

Alford said that the components of the new plan are designed to enhance the Oklahoma economy through support of small business, which drives much of the state's economic growth, and Tinker, which is vital to our state.

We believe that we will assemble an innovative plan that will benefit our customers and our state while limiting the financial impact, Alford said. OG&E customers' electric rates are below the national average, and the Corporation Commission's support of our request will maintain rates below that average.

The company said it will file its formal request on or about May 20 and will propose that new rates, if approved by the Commission, go into effect with the first billing cycle in December 2005. Hearings on the request are expected in the fall.

OG&E, a subsidiary of OGE Energy Corp. (NYSE: OGE), Oklahoma's largest electric utility, has not had an increase in its base electric rates since 1986. The company serves more than 735,000 retail electric customers in a service area spanning 30,000 square miles in Oklahoma and western Arkansas.
