of the company's U.S. subsidiaries and of its Taiwan subsidiary. Gary Burrell and Min Kao both have degrees in electrical engineering. They together founded the Garmin group of companies in 1989 and have jointly led the group since its founding.

Commenting on his retirement, Mr. Burrell said, "I feel fortunate and privileged to have had the opportunity to help build a company which has not only become a leader in general aviation and consumer GPS products, but whose products have helped improve the safety of navigation. As I reach retirement age, I hope to devote more time to my family, to traveling with my wife and to philanthropy. Min Kao has been my partner from the beginning. He is both an exceptional manager and leader and an exceptional engineer and he has been a driving force behind Garmin's growth and success. I am confident that he will continue to lead the company with the same skill and values that have been the foundation for our success."

"Garmin's success is built on the principles of innovation, convenience, performance, value, and service that Gary Burrell has always cherished," Dr. Kao said. "I look forward to helping to continue to serve and delight our customers with innovative products."

The company also announced that, in advance of proposed Nasdaq rule changes that would require that listed companies have a board composed of a majority of independent directors, it has restructured its board of directors to have a majority of independent directors. Ruey-Jeng Kao has resigned as a director and the board voted to reduce the number of directors from six to five. The board is now composed of Gary Burrell, Min Kao and three independent directors, Gene M. Betts, Donald H. Eller and Thomas A. McDonnell.
