Greetings of Warm Aloha to You All,

You probably know I'm a dreamer, always looking forward. And lately, I've been imagining some of the exciting opportunities that are possible with a combination of Medtronic and Covidien. I wanted to pass along some of my thoughts and observations on the proposed acquisition of Covidien and convey to you my support and excitement for this next chapter in Medtronic's history.

I remember thinking, when Medtronic's size had grown to include dozens of people, how we felt like family, and I hoped it would always stay that way. Well, it has for me. I still think of Medtronic employees as my family. And, when I think about our family almost doubling in size, it's pretty exciting!

As I see it, the most profound outcome of this relationship will be the ability to spread our Mission. We can serve more patients, in more ways, and in more places around the world than ever before. Instead of saying Medtronic improves a life every 3 seconds, I expect that we'll eventually be able to say every second. Imagine that! And with Covidien sharing our patient first focus, think of all the good we can do.

I am particularly excited about the potential for collaboration among the engineering and scientific talent of both organizations. Just think of the innovation that can occur when you bring that much brilliance to the table with the same Mission and vision. Tenet 5 of our Mission speaks to the ongoing development of our employees, and what a tremendous opportunity this proposed acquisition presents for employees of both Medtronic and Covidien to advance their professional and personal growth, take on new challenges, and participate in the growth of a global enterprise.

We all have to look toward the future, and this applies especially to those who are creating new technologies and therapies. To this end, I continually encourage the engineers, scientists and physicians I come in contact with to read the latest medical and scientific journals and literature—you will always learn something and it will likely generate compelling new ideas.

Many of you also know that I've had a long and dedicated commitment to Integrative Medicine—an approach to medicine that incorporates the best of high-tech and high-touch. I'm thrilled that there's a group of employees at Medtronic who understand its importance, meet regularly and share information on how we can achieve this goal. I encourage this just as I have always encouraged scientific interchange through the Medtronic Technical Forum. I can only believe that these innovation efforts and the Integrative Medicine approach will be advanced by our collective teams when the companies are joined together.

I am also excited about the potential we have to advance our collective philanthropic efforts around the world – living up to the sixth tenet of the Mission to be a good corporate citizen in our local communities. It’s important that we all realize that Medtronic is in communities all over the world – we are truly global citizens. Covidien also has people globally, and they will extend our presence into new communities.

This will serve as an ideal opportunity to advance our Philanthropic efforts. As you know, I’m so pleased with Medtronic Philanthropy’s Bakken Invitation program that encourages patients whose lives have benefitted from medical technology to Live On and Give On. I’ve wanted it to reach millions of people around the world. In our future, that will be possible. That’s true global citizenship, part of our Mission, and I’m sure it will only be improved and extended by the people of Covidien after the transaction closes.

At my age, I’ve had lots of dreams, and many wonderful ones have come true. But this dream – the one of inspiring millions of people to do good things with their extra gift of life, and in turn, create positive change for so many others in need – is my biggest dream ever – one that provides me with deep satisfaction and pride to be a part of this Medtronic family.

In the end, I challenge all Medtronic employees to continue to dream – to think about what is possible and work to achieve it. I know our engineers and scientists can get together with a host of new ideas from both organizations, and they can create unimaginable frontiers. I encourage you to take risks. Dream it, and then do it!

I’m looking forward to our exciting future. It takes each and every one of you to make our company function as well as it does. Mahalo nui loa (a very big thank you) to all of you for the fine work you do, and for your commitment and dedication to our Medtronic family and our Mission.

Dreaming On,
