Schering-Plough and Merck Provide Update on Distribution Agreement

KENILWORTH, NJ and WHITEHOUSE STATION, N.J., May 27, 2009 Schering-Plough has been notified that Johnson & Johnson, as a result of the proposed merger between Schering-Plough and Merck, has initiated arbitration proceedings to resolve the parties' dispute over whether Johnson & Johnson can terminate the distribution agreement relating to Schering-Plough's rights to REMICADE and SIMPONI.

While the initiation of the proceedings does not preclude a negotiated settlement, the companies say they are fully prepared to arbitrate the matter and to vigorously defend their rights.

Schering-Plough and Merck noted that Johnson & Johnson's position is contradicted by the plain language of the Remicade distribution agreement. The companies are confident that an arbitrator will agree that the Merck/Schering-Plough merger does not give Johnson & Johnson the right to terminate this agreement.

The companies noted that the arbitration process is expected to take place over the next 9 to 12 months and could be ongoing even after the merger has closed. On May 5, Centocor, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson, notified Schering-Plough of its intention to arbitrate whether Centocor has the right to terminate the distribution agreement as a result of the merger agreement and proposed merger. The arbitration process is clearly defined involving a number of steps, including the selection of an independent arbitrator, information exchanges and hearings, before a final decision is reached.

Any change or termination of the distribution agreement is excluded by the Merck/Schering-Plough merger agreement from the definition of "material adverse effect" and from the definition in the credit agreements entered into in connection with financing the merger. The companies continue to expect the merger to be completed in the fourth quarter without regard to the arbitration.
